CUSTER CONNECTIONS

Hey everyone! Get ready for an exciting weekend in Custer! Registration for the Annual Mickelson Trail Summer Trek kicks off today. From Friday through Sunday, 200 cyclists will ride all 109 miles of the beautiful Mickelson Trail. This event starts in Custer on both Friday and Saturday, bringing a lot of people to town. Every participant will receive $10 in Mickelson Trail Cash to spend in local businesses, regardless of whether they are Custer Cash participants. This “Trail Cash” is to be treated just like cash and change should be given as needed.

Tonight, the Chamber staff will host a fun welcome reception at Mt. Rushmore Brewing Co. for the riders. We're super grateful for our partnership with them and all the sponsors for making this event possible. It's always a blast welcoming the participants and their families to Custer.

We hope this is another big weekend for all of you! Keep up the good work!

Here are some words from the owners: "We opened our doors in the Summer of 2012 and have been making Pizzas ever since. When we first opened this was my parents' operation but having us involved was very important to them. We helped with the day-to-day operations and made sure the ship was running smoothly. Over the years my wife (then girlfriend) and I became more interested in the inner workings of the business. My dad mentored us along the way and the plan was set into motion for my wife and I to purchase the business one day.

Fast forward almost ten years and here we are! It has been a wild journey so far, and it will continue to be."

Travel South Dakota's Summer Campaign Off to Hot Start

PIERRE, S.D. – With Memorial Day nearing, summer travel is on the minds of many, including those who have seen Travel South Dakota's newly launched iteration of "So Much South Dakota, So Little Time." The campaign is seeing early success, having already generated an estimated $21.4 million in revenue through more than 97,200 hotel and flight bookings.

Launched in March, the campaign has generated 82 million impressions, reaching more than 9.7 million individuals. Web traffic to TravelSouthDakota.com is up 53% since the campaign launch.

Travel South Dakota's campaign seeks to remind prospective travelers of the joys that arise from letting go, following intuitions, and being spontaneous. This year's creative direction taps into nostalgia in a place where travel is less complicated and more raw and transformational.

"People are attracted to South Dakota's natural beauty, outdoor adventures, arts and culture, and the opportunity to experience the wonder and awe of authentic experiences," said James Hagen, Secretary of the South Dakota Department of Tourism. "Staying in front of target audiences with our message reminds people of the great places that await them in South Dakota, and that there is so much more to experience and explore in our state than most realize." Launched in March and continuing through October 2024, the "So Much South Dakota, So Little Time" peak campaign will continue to increase brand awareness, change perception, and drive qualified traffic to the Travel South Dakota website. The length of the campaign has been extended through October to prepare for seasonal shifts, take advantage of key travel planning timing, and reduce shoulder season gaps.

As video performance for Travel South Dakota's campaigns has been consistently excelling and this year's plan focuses on video content in a variety of lengths. Creatively, the campaign includes never-before-seen footage from across the state. To relate to the different audiences, there are several storylines. A consumer may follow a friend group's statewide adventure that goes from sailing in Yankton to a concert in Historic Deadwood; a family that goes from watching a rodeo to exploring the Children's Museum of South Dakota in Brookings; or a couple that goes from fine dining in Sioux Falls to rock climbing in the Black Hills.

The campaign aims to garner more than 138 million impressions regionally and 80 million impressions nationally across a mix of paid media channels including TV, video, audio, print magazine, out-of-home, podcasts, display, and paid social. Also in the mix are podcast host reads coming from Atlas Obscura, Bobby Bones, Hannah Brown, Office Ladies, and others. The out-of-home efforts are focused in Minneapolis, Minnesota and Denver, Colorado. Also new this year, Kansas City, Missouri has been added to the list of key markets.

Based on recent research from Longwoods International, the "So Much South Dakota, So Little Time" campaign is resonating with potential visitors as 63% were aware of the advertising and reported it improved their overall perception of the state. After exposure to the campaign, consumers reported increasing their thoughts as the state being "an exciting place," a "fun spot for a vacation," and a "must-see destination."

The "So Much South Dakota, So Little Time" peak campaign promises to restore the mystery in people's lives and offer summer travelers a chance to escape and leave feeling transformed and fulfilled.

Plague confirmed in Badlands-Conata Ecosystem

PENNINGTON COUNTY, S.D. - The National Park Service and U.S. Forest Service have confirmed plague as the cause of a prairie dog die off in Badlands National Park, Buffalo Gap National Grassland, and the greater Conata-Badlands ecosystem, in South Dakota based on a test result received 5/31.

The risk to humans remains low, however, plague is concerning. The disease has not been detected in Conata Basin since 2009, when it was responsible for killing more than 80 percent of the remaining population black-footed ferrets, one of the most endangered mammals in the world.

Plague is a non-native bacterial disease that occurs in rodents and their fleas throughout the western United States. It was introduced into the U.S. from rats aboard ships in the early 1900's and has since become endemic through the western U.S.

Approximately seven human cases occur every year, primarily in the southwestern U.S. and California. Most cases are transmitted through the bite of an infected flea, but humans can also be infected through contact with infected rodents, including animal carcasses, or by breathing infectious particles from an infected animal, sick pet, or sick human. South Dakota has never reported a human plague case, although cases in rodents such as prairie dogs were first reported in 2005.

Symptoms usually begin 2-6 days after exposure and include flu-like symptoms such as fever, chills, and muscle aches, as well as painful swelling at the site of a flea bite and the nearest lymph node. Symptoms can progress to blood infection and severe respiratory illness if not treated promptly. Plague can be treated with antibiotics but can be fatal if treatment is delayed. Although rare, infections acquired by breathing in infectious bacteria develop symptoms within 1-3 days and are most often fatal if not treated shortly after the onset of symptoms.

Plague is a rare disease but is a risk throughout much of the western United States. Plague can be prevented by practicing the following recommendations:

- Avoid contact with rodents and their fleas and burrows.
- Wear insect repellent when working or recreating outdoors. Wear long pants tucked into socks and closed-toe shoes.
- Never touch or approach a sick or dead animal, and never feed wildlife.
- Do not pitch tents near rodent burrows.
- Keep pets leashed and current on a flea and tick preventative.
- Know the signs and symptoms of plague. If you develop fever, chills, swelling at the site of an insect bite or nearby lymph node, seek medical care immediately and inform your doctor you may have been exposed to plague.

“We are concerned about the impacts to the black-footed ferret population and are taking necessary action to protect this important keystone species,” said Eric Veach, Superintendent of Badlands National Park. “Extensive conservation efforts in 2009 to manage the spread of plague were able to preserve a black-footed ferret population in the Conata-Badlands ecosystem, where the largest free-ranging black-footed ferret population in the world now resides.”
